Dandierine

GREW THIS HAIR

This lady started with a 25c bottle.

Miss Sarah MacComb, whose hair touches the floor when she stands erect, says: "My hair would not reach below my waist when I commenced using Dandierine, and it is now over five feet in length." (Look at her beautiful hair and judge for yourself whether or not she got the worth of her money.)

FRANCES MARIE KNOWLTON
AGE 24 MONTHS.

The above photograph of Miss Frances Marie Knowlton shows what care, persistence and a good hair invigorating tonic do in the way of producing hair. This little girl has had Dandierine applied to her hair and scalp regularly ever since she was three months of age with the result that she now has the longest and most beautiful head of hair ever possessed by a child of her age. Frances Marie is the daughter of Dr. E. W. Knowlton, the discoverer of Dandierine, 380 Garfield bldg., Chicago. The doctor says that her hair continues to grow very rapidly and he is sure it will be long enough to touch the floor when she stands erect by the time she is four years old.

MISS MAY DENMORE
34 DELAWARE PL. CHICAGO.

Miss May Denmore, now the longest-haired lady in the world, says: "I have used your Dandierine two years, and my hair has grown over an inch in length every month since I commenced its use. It surely contains most remarkably invigorating qualities." (Miss Denmore writes us under recent date that Dandierine has made her hair grow three feet longer than it was naturally, and is still growing.)

Large Number of Graduates
Receive Diplomas

AT CONVENTION HALL

COMMISSIONER MACFARLAND
PRESIDES OVER EXERCISES.

Address by Justice Shepard of District
Court of Appeals—The Prize
Winners.

The climax of the commencement period for 1903 of the public school system of Washington occurred last night, when several thousand people assembled in Convention Hall to witness the exercises at the award of diplomas to the graduates of the Central, Eastern and Western High Schools. Commissioner H. B. MacFarland presided and made a brief introductory address, and the 130 graduates from the several high schools received their diplomas from the hand of Commissioner John Biddle. Associate Justice Seth Shepard of the District Court of Appeals delivered the address to the graduates and the award of scholarships was made by Mr. A. T. Stuart, superintendent of schools. A splendid musical program was furnished for the occasion by the United States Marine Band Orchestra, under the leadership of Lieut. Santelmann.

The scene presented in the immense hall was at once both notable and inspiring. In the center of the west side of the hall was a large stage, at least one hundred feet long, to the front of which were seated the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the members of the board of education, the principals of the schools and their assistants, the members of local clergy and numerous invited guests of prominence in educational circles, both in this city and elsewhere. The rear of the stage was extended by a long platform, the front of which was covered by a canopy of white, while suspended from the ceiling over the stage were three designs, each composed of the colors of the respective schools—white and dark blue for Central, white and light blue for the Eastern, and green, red and white for the Western. Across the front of the stage broad streamers of canary and purple extended hiding the view of the rear of the stage from those occupying seats in the front of the hall. The platform was banked on either side by immense clusters of palms and tropical plants, and from all parts of the ceiling and the walls were suspended flags, banners and gaily colored bunting.

The Graduates Appear.

While the audience was being seated the orchestra played a number of pleasing selections, and when it struck up the strains of the "High School Cadets" the procession of graduates marched into the hall from the main entrance. The young ladies leading the procession. The line turned up an aisle to the left before it reached the platform, and continued on its way to the middle of the hall, when the procession came directly to the center aisle to the stage, where the lines parted, and the graduates marched onto the platform from either side, and took their places in the seats reserved for them in the rear. The arrival of the graduates was the signal for loud and prolonged applause, and many a parent's heart swelled with justifiable pride as his or her son or daughter appeared in the triumphal march.

When the applause had subsided Commissioner MacFarland introduced Rev. James H. Blake, who offered the invocation, following which the orchestra played a minuet, "Celebre," by Padewski, and Mr. MacFarland then spoke briefly.

Mr. MacFarland's Remarks.

The Commissioner said in part: "This is Bunker Hill day, but we have not come here tonight to celebrate that day, although the patriotic setting of this scene would be most appropriate for such an occasion. This is the last and largest of the public school commencements. It closes our year. It is impressive and inspiring in itself, in this splendid array of graduates, in this splendid audience of relatives and friends. We are all here primarily because these graduates are here to congratulate them and wish them well, for it is their night, the culmination of their public school career, and the beginning of their larger life. It is the crown of the system of the District of Columbia, in which nearly one-sixth of the population is found from year to year. It is our great interest. It stands first in the amount of appropriations in the District budget, but it stands first most significantly in our hearts and minds. It is the crown of our public institutions and the guarantee of their perpetuity. It is worthy the devotion of all the public servants who labor in it, and it is worthy the interest of every citizen of the District. Those who have children in the public schools appreciate this, and they are the vast majority of the public. But there ought not to be one intelligent man or woman in the national capital who is not interested in its public schools. We can all be proud of our schools, proud of their teachers and their scholars, and of their practical results, and we need more buildings and enlargement and improvement of old buildings, in order to accommodate the entire school population, and we need more for the teachers, and we need more for the scholars. These things we may reasonably expect to secure from Congress in the near future. Every citizen can help to secure these things, and we trust that every citizen will do so."

Following the address by Mr. MacFarland Mr. Todhunter of the Marine Band played a cornet solo, and called forth enthusiastic applause from the audience and elicited an encore.

Justice Shepard's Address.

In introducing Justice Shepard the presiding officer said it was most appropriate that the young men and women who were to go out from the public schools to become active citizens should be addressed by one so competent to speak on citizenship and the duties entailed by that relation. In the beginning of his remarks Justice Shepard referred to the origin of the race, and said that every race, dominant race had some ruling passion. The ruling passion of the Romans was for expansion of empire; that of the Moors, for the conquest of the world; that of the British, for the domination of the sea. The ruling passion of the American race was for the expansion of the state, and the citizen by a member of the state, while with the Teutons the state existed for the individual. With the combination of Roman and Teutonic races, the speaker said, the law and order principles of the former acted as a tempering restraint upon a too radical interpretation of the principles of the latter race, and the combination had its fruition in the American race. The idea of personal religious liberty has always been a ruling passion with Americans. The racial spirit of individualism made England great, and the same spirit led the American pioneers westward, and continued to point the way for American progress.

Menace to Country's Prosperity.

After discussing briefly the development and progress of the United States and the American race, Justice Shepard turned his attention to the dangers to be guarded against by citizens of this republic. He declared that the greatest danger to the country lay in the tendency toward too rigid organization and the greed for wealth and power. Large combinations threaten individual liberty in the progress of this country. What has not been apprehended is the fatal consequences to individual achievement resulting from immense commercial combinations. The opportunities for individual effort have become fewer and fewer. If not checked these large combinations will kill the free institutions of the land and will result in socialism.

Another thing to be feared, said Judge Shepard, is the wholesale immigration which has poured into this country. Unchecked, it threatens the homogeneity of our race. This great influx we have been unable to assimilate and the danger to our progress and civil integrity.

The greatest agency to prevent the downfall of the country, declared the speaker, is in the imperishable potentialities of the American home—the home of honest labor, habitual content, and moral surroundings. A necessary supplement to the home is the public schools. The perpetuation of our republican institutions must depend on the intelligence of the whole people and in this line the educational system of the country is playing its important part.

True Education.

Justice Shepard then spoke of the true education, which he declared must be directed as an instrument for the formation and building of character, the heart and brain must be developed and trained to right thinking. The differences in mental faculties should be studied by the instructors and the mind of the pupil should be trained in accordance with nature's bent in order that the child may attain to his highest achievement. The obligation of the state in the matter of providing instruction for the children of the country is to train them to perform skillfully, honestly and industriously the work that falls to their lot. Higher education, said the speaker, often recruits the ranks of socialists, anarchy and crime.

In closing Justice Shepard urged the graduates to cultivate independence and self-reliance. He warned them against cultivating a passion for money and admonished them to be watchful of opportunities to do good. "Do not shirk honest labor, nor condemn it," he said, "resolve to be men of action, to be men of character, to be active members of the body politic and let your ambitions be high."

Scholarships and Prizes.

An interesting feature of the exercises was the awarding of scholarships and prizes, which was performed by Superintendent A. T. Stuart, as follows:

The Kendall scholarship in Columbian University to Robert De S. Brown of the Central High School, whose general average in the examination was 97.11 per cent. The first Columbian University scholarship to Louise Winifred McCoy of the Eastern High School. The second Columbian University scholarship to Mary Simpson Birch of the Western High School. R., for the best essay on American history written by a graduate of the Washington High Schools was awarded to Miss Ethel Hanna McQuay of the Central High School, the subject of whose essay was "Baron Von Steuben as the Organizer of the Continental Army." Those receiving honorable mention in the contest were Sarah E. Cuddy, Eastern; Eleanor Owen Latham, Central; and Edna M. Ricketts, Central. After the orchestra had played "Ella-walla," the graduates filed across the front of the platform and received their diplomas from Commissioner Biddle as their names were called.
